A Test.

One of the most far-reaching acts of President Wilson's Administration will consist in his appointments to the Interstate Commerce Commission. This body has jurisdiction over the basic services of this country-i, e., express, railroad, steamship, telegraph, and telephone. The prosperity of whole sections of the United States and of countless endividuals depends very largely on the development and prosperty of these utilities and on the efficiency and the even-handedness of the services they render. The commission's work of regulation is absolutely fundamental and uncensing in that it sets standards, discourages the rascals, and gives backing to the honest. The force and effect of any act of Congress concerning these matters depend on its adtainistration by the commission. We must have the best men-Collier's Weekly.
